Guardian Angels say they are fast becoming popular within the community- NZ chapter has started recruiting

15 January 2006

The New Zealand chapter of the Guardian Angels says the group is fast becoming popular within the community.

The crime fighting group, made up of local citizens, have just started recruiting in West Auckland.

New Zealand chapter leader Andy Cawston says overall the community is embracing the Angels.

He says people driving by are giving them a wave, although they have had a few gang members flash their insignia at them as well.

He says a number of people turned up to a recruiting session in Henderson yesterday, but he is still looking for a lot more volunteers.
